Bio

Danielle was born in Arizona and after graduating from the University of Arizona with a BS in Criminal Justice, she became an Air Force Intelligence officer for four years and lived in England and South Korea. She then obtained a Master's degree in International Diplomacy while living in Queensland, Australia. When she returned to the US, she changed career paths and studied holistic nutrition and sustainable food systems and became interested in indigenous edible trees and food sources, which brought her to work for Trees Matter. When not giving away free trees or educating others about the importance of trees, Danielle's developing recipes using Arizona native ingredients like Mesquite flour and Carob powder. Danielle's favorite tree is the Salix babylonica, or Weeping Willow.
